When Tess's father dies in Montana, she writes to Matt and travels to Chicago to join him. Tess has loved Matt all her life, but at the age of 25, has given up hope that he will ever return her affection. Determined to get on with her life, she lives in the same boarding house as Matt and finds employment as a nurse's assistant. Matt is fiercely protective of Tess, but keeping her safe when she becomes involved with a group of suffragettes tries his temper. Once Tess discovers that Matt loves her but refuses to act on his feelings because of his Indian blood, she tests his self-control even further.
